MEN IN AMBUSH FIRE ON AND WOUND CARMEN AND SOLDIERS

NIGHT OF EXCITEMENT FOLLOWS A PEACEFUL DAY.

A day devoid of lawlessness in the street railway strike situation was followed by an exciting night. At that time three cars were fired on near Walnut street by skulking men in a field near the track and with disastrous results. Sergeant Charles D. Easley, of Company E, Lynchburg Home Guard, was seriously shot in the hip and the ball was not located by probing. His brother, John B. Easley, a private in the same company, was shot in the knee, receiving a painful but not dangerous wound. Motorman Warford, of Baltimore, was shot in the hand, receiving a slight wound.

Two men were arrested in the vicinity on charges of interfering with running the cars. They were released on bail.

Several accidents and minor injuries and excitements are reported. Sergeant Richeson, of the West Augusta Guard, Staunton, Company K, 70th Regiment, and Private Henkel, of the same company, were both slightly injured in accidents and are at the Virginia Hospital. Richeson had his leg painfully mashed by being hurled from a car while rounding the turn at Twenty-first and Main. Neither is seriously injured.

About this time or a few minutes later a fire alarm turned in from Box 21 and caused by the explosion of a lamp on Twenty-sixth street, causing some excitement and attracted a crowd. It was accidental.

Near the same point, at Twenty-second and Church Hill Avenue, some one threw a stone at a car and the troops on board fired harmless volleys as a warning.

TROOPS MAY STAY LONG

Some Think They Will Remain Two Weeks.

THE THROWING OF ROCKS

A Few Scattered Cases Reported Yesterday—With the Exception of the West End Shooting There Was but Little Trouble.

With the exception of the murderous attempts on the lives of the carmen and troops aboard cars in the West End, the day was devoid of violence, and cars were run about on the usual schedule and under perfect control. A few scattered cases of rock throwing are reported in one of the streets in the vicinity of the Clay Street sheds at Twenty-ninth and P Streets and elsewhere else was under perfect control. A few scattered cases of rock throwing are reported in one of the streets in the vicinity of the Clay Street sheds at Twenty-ninth and P Streets and elsewhere else was under perfect control.

The full schedule of cars was run on the Main Street lines from the Reservoir to Fifth Street, the Main and Broad Street lines from Chimborazo to the Reservoir, and about half the usual number of cars run on the Clay Street line. Every precaution had been taken by the military, who are practically in sole charge of the situation, to prevent trouble and interference with the operation of the cars in the street centers of mob violence the day before.

Most Places Quiet.
As a result of this and the Mayor's proclamation and the police freely circulated that the soldiers meant business and would disperse mobs at any cost, quiet prevailed everywhere except in the West End along the Main Street line, and no outbreak was anticipated there. It was fairly uniform, all the earlier portion of the day having been entirely quiet and orderly throughout.

At Twenty-ninth and P Streets and along P Street to the turn into Twenty-fifth Street, the scene of several demonstrations on other days, the military were stationed in heavy force. Major Stanley W. Martin, of Danville, commanded the battalion at that point, which was composed of the following commands: Company G, Alexandria Light Infantry; Company I, Farmville Guards; Company K, West Augusta Guards; of Staunton; Company L, Fredericksburg Guards; and Company M, Danville Light Infantry. Major Martin had taken the precaution to have all in the vicinity notified that no loitering would be tolerated. The formidable show of force and the efficient service of the troops stationed there sufficed to maintain excellent order.

A Formidable Force.
In Fulton also there was a formidable force of militia, which early took charge of the situation and did their work so well that the regular schedule of cars was not interrupted, save by the breaking of a trolley wire, which was purely

Three Men Wounded.

Sergeant Charles D. Easley, of the Lynchburg Home Guards, struck in the right hip and badly injured.

John B. Easley, his brother, a private in the same company, slightly injured just above the knee-joint.

Warford, of Baltimore, a motorman, slightly hurt in the right hand.

Two strikers—Geo. C. Winn and R. J. Evans, formerly motormen with the Passenger and Power Company—were arrested near the scene of the shooting for interfering with motormen and were bailed by 'Squire Lewis.

Sheluded by an impenetrable veil of darkness a half dozen or more would-be assassins lay concealed in a Henrico county field last night and turned a galling fire of rifles or pistols every now and then upon the Main Street cars moving along some fifty or one hundred feet from them.

Out of the blackness came some ten or twelve flashes at different times, followed by whizzing bullets, which flew in every direction around the cars. Four of them were thus fired upon and three times the roar of a half score of muskets sounded back into the gloom. It took an hour's time to scare the marauders off, and in this time they had made their dastardly hand felt. Three of their hidden charges took effect, and three men were hurt, more or less seriously. They are:

SERGEANT CHARLES D. EASLEY, Lynchburg Home Guards, shot in the right hip and badly hurt.

JOHN B. EASLEY, his brother, a private in the same company, shot above the knee and slightly wounded.

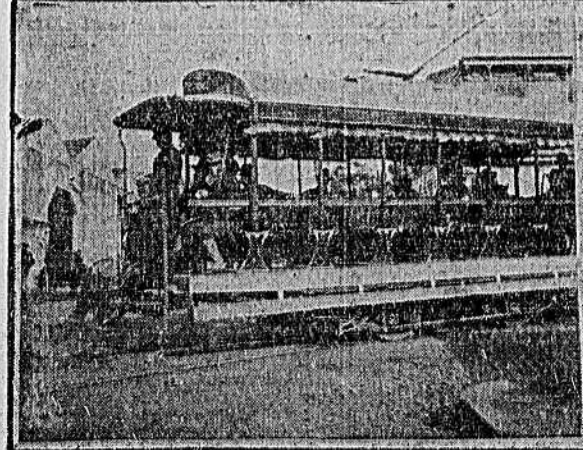

MOTORMAN WARFORD, from Baltimore, hit in the right hand and slightly hurt.

A band of soldiers, with cocked muskets, scoured the field from which the shots came, but without effect, and the search was abandoned. A short while later, however, not far from the place, two strikers were arrested, charged with interfering with motormen. One of them, it is said, made a damaging admission, and upon his person, it is reported, were found empty cartridge shells. Both men were bailed for their appearance to-day before 'Squire Lewis. The men are George C. Winn and R. J. Evans, both formerly motormen with the Passenger and Power Company.

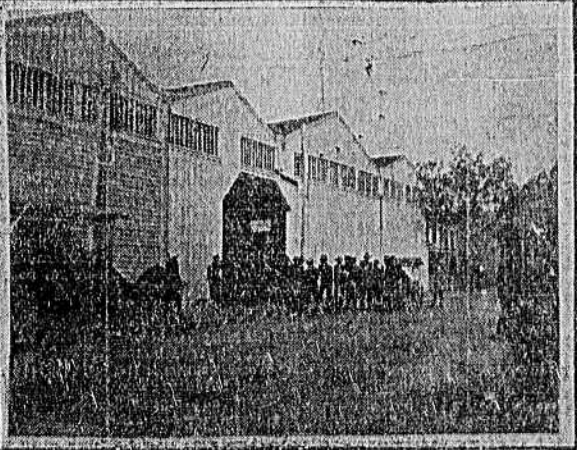

A Dangerous Route.

From Vine Street, where are located the Main Street sheds of the company, to the Reservoir is an ugly stretch of country—a constant source of worry to motormen and military alike. On either side of the track stretch out in the distance wide fields, some of them bare; others, wooded and bushy. Here and there a slight elevation presents a bluff running along the height of the car affording admirable vantage ground for these hostile disposers. At almost any point along the route a few men behind a bush could slaughter a car full and scamper off in the darkness of night undetected. An electric light now and then sends a fitful gleam abroad, but for the most part all along the way the blackness of Erebus covers everything. Cars speed along this ugly route swiftly with the soldiers there in standing constantly on the alert with bayoneted muskets poking out of the sides of the car. On the step an officer stands, pistol in hand, peering steadily in the darkness.

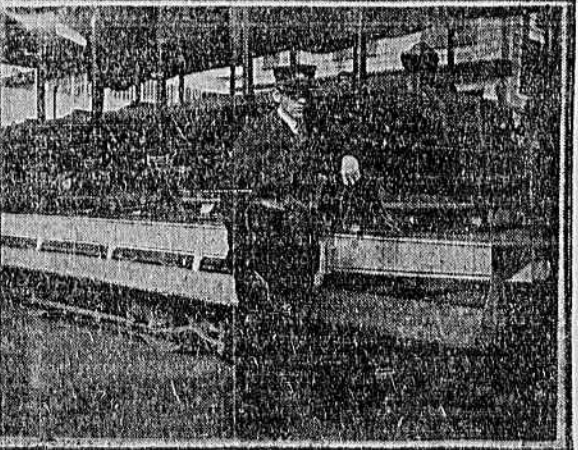

It was just within this ominous point
